Ground cover

Ground cover plants spread like a carpet, low to the ground across the soil. They can hold your planting in place, protecting the soil from erosion and helping to suppress weeds. Lower-growing plants, particularly in a municipal garden, would be a high choice like dense shade, such as a geranium (Geranium) or pampas grass. To use a single specimen or a small group, you can use a softwood or a better cut, it will grow nicer and is better for the environment. Some of the plants in this section have a pot symbol, which means they can also work in a large number.

Alchemilla alpina / Alpine lady's mantle
A perennial in the range of 40-60cm tall, multi-stemmed, green-herbaceous, with beautiful, green-herbaceous, serrated foliage, and tiny, pale flowers. It has a tendency to spread vigorously in a moist garden.
